

Jason Dilts – “The Army Medical Department”

The Response of the U.S. Army Medical Service to the War of the Rebellion

This program will explore the growth of the Medical Service in direct relation to the War of the Rebellion and the need for improvements. It will review the achievements and failures of the service and take a look at the service based on documented statistics.

About our Speaker:

Jason has been an American Civil War Medicine Living Historian for eight years. He currently is commissioned with the rank of Lt. Colonel – Chief Medical Officer of the Union Volunteer Brigade. The programs he developed and presents have been based on the simple facts based on solid research with primary sources. He especially enjoyed the administrative aspect of the Medical Service of the Army during the War.

Outside of his passion for the Medical Service of the American Civil War, he has been a volunteer with the Franklin Township Fire Department for the past twenty-six years. He is currently in his second career working for the County of Somerset Department of Public Works. Prior to that he worked as an EMT retiring after twenty-five years of field service.
